The Publisher's Note.

As the object of publishing Explanatory Keys to Pathmala Parts I to IV has been explained in the Key to Pathmala Part I, no word is required to preface this key.

The foot-notes, coming as they did from the pen of Mr. Bhojajee V. Daiya, Late Head Master of the Cantonment A. V. School, Camp Deesa, who has forty years' experience in teaching English, will be found very useful to the students of Pathmala by way of giving them an additional knowledge of English words, phrases and sentences in connection with the words occurring in the Anglo-Gujarati translation series. As a rule, the teacher of Pathmala perhaps seldom or never gives such additional notes to his students while teaching it. Hence the necessity of giving these foot-notes, which, it is hoped, will also amply repay their perusal, if carefully studied.

EXERCISE I.

1. The sun will<sup>1</sup> rise at five o'clock to-morrow. 2. Thou shalt not steal, such is the commandment of God. 3. We shall be much pleased<sup>2</sup> to see you. 4. If I eat so much, I shall die. 5. If<sup>3</sup> you

1 "Shall" અને "Will" ના ઉપયોગ માટે નીચે લખેલી કવિતા યાદ રાખવી.

In the first person simply "Shall" foretells;
( ભવિષ્ય ખતાવે છે. )

In "Will" a threat ( ધમકી ) or else a promise dwells;

"Shall" in the second and third does threat;

"Will" simply then foretells the future feat.

અર્થ—પહેલા પુરુષમાં "Shall" ફક્ત ભવિષ્ય ખતાવે છે. "Will" માં ધમકી કે વચન રહેલું છે. બીજાને ત્રીજા પુરુષમાં "Shall" ધમકી ખતાવે છે ત્યારે "Will" ફક્ત ભવિષ્યનું કામ ખતાવે છે.

Lessons for Translation.

LESSON I

Two women and a boy.

Two women quarrelled<sup>1</sup> for a boy. One<sup>2</sup> said he was her son, while the other said he was hers, or one said "He is my son." while the other said "This boy is mine." Afterwards these two women wentt o the king and said<sup>3</sup> "Your Majesty, "Give us justice." The king heard the statements<sup>3</sup> of both, called a sepoy and said "Divide this boy into two equal parts<sup>4</sup> and give one part to one woman and the other part to the otbe woman." On hearing this order one of them stood silent, while fhe other cried<sup>5</sup> out and said "Your Majesty, If<sup>6</sup> this be the justice I am to get, I don't want the boy. Let him be alive and give him to to that woman." Upon this the king thought that the boy was hers, because the other woman did not seem to have

LESSON II.

An old man and his sons.

An old man had five sons, but they did not live in peace.<sup>1</sup> The old man was very much grieved at this, and reasoned much with them, but they gave no heed to him. When the old man was on his death-bed,<sup>2</sup> he said to one of his sons "Bring a bundle of thin sticks." When he brought a bundle, the old man said to each of them "Break this bundle." But the bundle could not be broken by any of them. Then the old man said "Now untie it, and let each of you take a single stick separately, and break it." When they did so, the sticks were instantly<sup>3</sup> broken. The boys were astonished and said "Father, what object have you in getting these sticks broken by us?" Then the old man said "See the strength of union, you could not break the whole bundle. But when each of the sticks fell separate,<sup>4</sup> all of you could break it. What did you learn from this?" The boys could not give<sup>5</sup> any answer. The old man said "Look, when the sticks were together, they had support of one another, but when they were separated they lost that support. Therefore if you live in harmony, no one will disturb you, and you will live in happiness.<sup>6</sup> Where there is peace, there is happiness."

LESSON III.

A story of two young parrots.

A story of two young parrots<sup>1</sup>. A birdcatcher carried off two young parrots<sup>2</sup> from a nest, one of which he sold to a good man and the other to bad one. In the good man's house neither quarrels.

nor abusing took place; all would speak with one another with civility<sup>2</sup> and sweetness; if any one came to see them, they spoke with him politely<sup>3</sup> and respectfully. The parrot learnt all this. But at the bad man's, fighting and abusing always took place. The parrot learnt all this. One day, it so happened, that the king of that city was passing by that road. On seeing him, the parrot said "Thou art a thief, thou art a liar, go away from here, off with<sup>5</sup> you." On hearing this, the king was offended,<sup>6</sup> but said nothing. On going further, he came to the good man's house, where the parrot, on seeing him, said "Come, Sir, You are welcome, we are much pleased to see you. Are you all right, Sir?" On hearing this, the king was astonished. Afterwards on making an inquiry,<sup>7</sup> the king found that both of those parrots were

The proverb, "we are influenced<sup>10</sup> by the company we keep," is true. Therefore we should be away from the company of bad boys.

LESSON IV.

Who created you ?

Who created you, all other children and birds? Who gave all these—ears to hear, eyes to see, and the nose to smell? Who made the mouth<sup>1</sup> for tasting and speaking? Where have all these, namely, hands to hold, legs to walk, and a mind to understand<sup>2</sup> right and wrong, come from? Who gave us all these? God gave us all these things. Also every thing you see is created by him. He created you and also your relations and friends. He has created you in order that you

Even if you tell a lie, he knows it too. Not only does He protect you during the day, but he watches you during the night too. How gracious He is to us all !

LESSON V.

The eye.

The eye,<sup>1</sup> indeed, is small itself, but we can see large objects with it. The whole form is reflected in it as in a small mirror. The real<sup>2</sup> form and colour are seen with it. The eye is placed in a small cavity<sup>3</sup> on the face. That cavity is surrounded by a bone, so that the eye is protected. Above the eye is the eye-brow in the form of an arch, which serves the purpose of a roof. The eyelid serves the purpose of the door of the eye. On account of the eye-lids, fine dust or intense light cannot enter<sup>4</sup> the eye. The eye-lashes prevent any insect from flying into the eye. He, who cannot see with one of his eyes, is called one-eyed. He, who cannot<sup>5</sup> see with either eye, is called blind. He, who can see during the day, but not at night, is called night-blind. We should be kind to such persons, and thank<sup>6</sup> God as our eyes are free from defect.

LESSON VI.

A shop-keeper and a shepherd.

Once upon a time in a fair a shepherd stood at a confectioner's shop, and looked as if he were pleased with the smell<sup>1</sup> of fresh sweetmeats. As the confectioner was cunning and covetous,<sup>2</sup> he thought of exacting<sup>3</sup> money from the shepherd.

He said "Well, Friend, Do you enjoy the smelling of sweetmeats much?" The shepherd replied "Yes, Friend, I enjoy it much." The shop-keeper, winking at other customers, said "Then pay for it." The shepherd being confused, asked "money<sup>4</sup> for what?" The shop-keeper replied, "For taking the smell of sweetmeats, or for smelling sweetmeats." The shepherd said "Have I eaten any of your sweetmeats?" The cunning man replied "You are a silly fellow. It is all one and the same thing to smell and to eat. Give me money." In the meanwhile a Brahmin, who was hearing this controversy, said "Take your money." Saying this, he rattled four or five pice in his hand. The shopkeeper said "Where is the money? you are only rattling the money in your own hand." The Brahmin replied "If smelling sweetmeats and eating them are one and the same thing, then hearing money rattle and taking it are also one and the same thing." The people clapped<sup>5</sup> their hands, and shout-

LESSON VII.

The dog.

The horse, the camel, the elephant, the sheep, and the goat are tame animals. They<sup>1</sup> are very useful to man. But the dog<sup>2</sup> is the most faithful of the all tame animals. It is called the friend of man. The animals that are found in very hot countries are not found in very cold ones. As for example,<sup>3</sup> the camel and the elephant, which are inhabitants of hot countries, cannot live in cold ones. The ox and the horse, which are found in hot countries like India, and in cold ones like England, cannot live in the polar<sup>4</sup> regions. But the dog follows man where-ever he settles. Dogs<sup>5</sup> are of many kinds. Some dogs have long hair, some have short hair, some are large in size, and strong, while others are small and beautiful. Dogs can do many things, some are watch-dogs, some are hounds, some trace the foot-steps of thieves with the power of their scent, and some carry sledges in cold countries. The shepherd's dog looks after the flocks of sheep and goats, but the most useful dogs are kept by the monks of the monasteries situated in the Alps.<sup>6</sup> Men are frequently overtaken by snow-storms while travelling in the Alps, and are embedded in snow. Such embedded men are found out by these dogs, and their lives are saved by them. Those dogs are large-sized and noble-looking. They are called St. Bernard dogs. The Newfoundland<sup>7</sup> dogs are strong swimmers. They have saved hundreds of men from being drowned. It is difficult to say which of the dumb animals is the most sagacious,<sup>8</sup> but the general opinion<sup>9</sup> is that the dog is the most intelligent<sup>10</sup> of them.

LESSON VIII.

The Dove and the Ant.

A thirsty ant went to a stream to drink water. It fell into deep water, and was being carried along. A dove<sup>1</sup> saw it and as it was moved<sup>2</sup> with pity, it plucked a leaf from a tree with its bills and threw it into the water. The ant clung to it and came to the bank.<sup>4</sup> Then one day it so happened that the very dove was perching at a certain place. A bird-catcher was spreading a net<sup>5</sup> over it unpereceived.<sup>6</sup> No sooner did the ant know it, than it went and stung the dove in the leg, whereupon the dove immediately<sup>7</sup> flew off. From this story, we should take<sup>8</sup> a lesson that we should be

LESSON IX.

Against cheating.

A wood-cutter was going into a village with a bundle of faggots to sell it.<sup>1</sup> His hatchet, which he had put into his bundle slipped off on the way, but he did not know<sup>2</sup> of it. It so happened that the head man of that village was passing by that very road. He saw the hatchet and picked it up. That poor wood-cutter was sitting at the door of his cottage with a sorrowful face and was saying "I am really unfortunate,<sup>3</sup> I have lost the very instrument<sup>4</sup> with which I was supporting my wife and children." Oh, God, "Be merciful to my children and help us. Thou art the only friend of the poor." In the meantime the head man, who was passing by the road, heard these words and thought that that hatchet must be his. He said to the wood-man "I say, Come to my house, I will give you something." The wood-cutter went to the head man's house. The head man asked him "Well, Have you lost your hatchet?" The wood-cutter replied "Yes, Sir." The head-man went into the house and bringing a new shining hatchet with a fine handle, said "Friend, Take this hatchet of yours. Is this yours or not?" The honest wood-cutter at once replied "No, Sir". How can a poor man like myself have such a hatchet? The head man again went into the house, and bringing a small but a new hatchet asked "Well, Is this small axe yours"? That poor man was pleased and replied "Yes, Sir, that very hatchet is mine, those two are not mine." The head man was pleased and said "I give you these two as a reward for your honesty. Take and carry them away." If he had deceived the head man and taken the first hatchet, the latter would not have given him his own hatchet.

LESSON X.

Silk.

There is a kind of worms which produce<sup>1</sup> silk. That worm feeds<sup>2</sup> upon the leaves of the mulberry tree. When it has eaten many leaves, it takes out a fine thread of silk from its body, makes<sup>3</sup> a cocoon as large as a date, and remains confined in it for many days. In order to extract silk the cocoon is put into the hot-boiling water, when the worm inside<sup>4</sup> it, dies and the thread is unrolled.<sup>5</sup> If the cocoon be not thus put into water, the worm in it, after some days, would become a butter-fly,<sup>6</sup> and cut its way out through the silk. Silk is much used in sewing and embroidering.<sup>7</sup> It is also woven into fine cloths. When silk is first taken out of a cocoon, its colour is yellowish. Afterwards it is dyed red, yellow, green and tinged with such various colours. There are many kinds of silken cloths. The best silk cloths<sup>8</sup> are imported<sup>9</sup> from France, China and Japan.

LESSON XI.

The Air.

Man as well as other creatures cannot do without three things. They are air<sup>1</sup>, water and food. No creature can live without air, water and food. Therefore, those three things are called the essentials<sup>2</sup> of life. The air is everywhere; go wherever you will, there must be the air. The air surrounds the earth on all sides. The large sphere of this air is called the atmosphere.<sup>3</sup> We cannot see the air. It is an invisible fluid element. The air is not an unmixed element, but it is made up of two gases. One is called oxygen,<sup>4</sup> and the other nitrogen.<sup>5</sup>

8. Fabrics. Brocade. ગજઆણી. 9. Imports, દેશમાં આવતો માલ. Exports, દેશમાંથી જતો માલ.

1. Air, સ્થિર હોય, તે જ્યારે તે હાલેચાલે ત્યારે તે Wind કહેવાય છે. 2. Essential (a) જરૂરનું 3. બીજો અર્થ અસર થાય છે, જેમકે He had been brought up in an atmosphere of love, જ્યાં પ્રિયિની અસર વ્યાપી રહેલી હતી ત્યાં તે ઉછરેલો છે. 4. પ્રાણધારવાયુ. 5. પ્રાણધાતક વાયુ.

The air is the mixture of these two gases. Life depends upon oxygen. If this gas is not in the air, we cannot live. But this gas is very strong. If we breathe in oxygen only, it will burn us. So God has so arranged<sup>6</sup> that a gas called nitrogen alone cannot support life. Its function is only to dilute oxygen. There is a third element in the air in a very small proportion. It is a very poisonous gas; if we breathe it in, it will soon kill us, therefore it is mixed with the air in a very small portion. But this gas is not useless. Nothing is useless in the world. This gas is the food of trees and leaves. It is called carbonic acid gas. There is a great difference between the air we breathe in and that which we breathe out by the nose. There is more oxygen in the air which we breathe in, and more carbonic acid gas in that which we breathe out. So it is injurious to breathe in the air which has been breathed out by the nose and the mouth. We should not sleep in a closed room. We should not go at once into closed cells or closed old houses. The reason is that carbonic acid gas is accumulated, in such places. The air is a wonderful element, and it shows the glory of God.

LESSON XII.

The Ship.

The art of ship-building is very old. In very old ages, people used to cross rivers and streams by means of rafts. After that they cut the stems of large trees, and having scooped them, they made them into canoes<sup>2</sup> and rowed them with paddles like oars. Thereafter as time passed on, large boats and ships were built. In building ships a keel of thick planks is first made; and then wooden flooring is made upon it, which is called the deck.<sup>3</sup> The hollow part between the keel and the deck is called hold.<sup>4</sup> A strong piece of wood standing

2. ઝાડના થડને કોતરીને કરેલું હોડકું. 3. To deck (વ) શય્યાગારકું. 4. Hold માં સમાન રહે છે.

In the middle of a ship is called the mast. Large ships have more than one mast. With this mast is bound a thick pole, which is called a yard, and to this yard are sewn seven sheets of coarse cloth which are called sails. When the sail is unfurled, it is filled with wind, and so the ship sails very fast. In former times navigation depended on the back-wind. If the wind were in the opposite direction, the ship would stop. But now ships are sailed by means of steam. Such ships are called steamers.

War-ships are made as strong as possible, and they are covered with iron sheets from outside. Such ships are called manvars. The word 'manvar' is the corruption of the English word "man-o-war". On such a man-o-war large cannons,<sup>6</sup> hundreds of sailors, and thousands of soldiers can be kept. Steamers sailing from England to America, Australia etc. are of a large size. In them a very good accommodation can be made for one thousand or twelve hundred passengers with their luggage.<sup>8</sup> All the men-o'-war of a country collected together are called its navy.<sup>9</sup> The navy of England is stronger than that of all other countries. France and Germany are second<sup>10</sup> to England. There is not a single port of the world, <sup>11</sup> in which the trade of England is not carried on. So England has to keep a strong navy for the protection of its trade.

LESSON XIII.

Precious metals ( Gold and Silver.)

Gold and silver are considered precious metals,<sup>1</sup> because they are not obtained from the earth so much<sup>2</sup> as other metals. Gold is a metal of yellow colour, and is very heavy.<sup>3</sup> It is also soft and malleable. Silver is a beautiful metal of white colour. It is also soft and malleable, but it is not so heavy as gold.

Gold and silver do not contract rust<sup>4</sup> as iron and copper, therefore people have been putting on ornaments of gold and silver from very ancient times. Men and women of this country decorate their bodies with ornaments such as rings, ear-rings,<sup>5</sup> necklaces, chains, anklets, waist-bands &c.

Money is the chief medium of exchange.<sup>6</sup> And people have been using gold and silver from very ancient times. Sovereigns or guineas are coined from gold.<sup>7</sup> Every gold coin contains eleven parts of gold and one part of copper. The reason why copper is mixed is that the coin thereby becomes hard. If we take pure gold, coins will wear away. Rupees, eight anna, four anna, and two anna-pieces are made from silver. The place where coins are struck is called a mint. The Government keeps the management of the mint only in their own hands.

In the continent of Asia the greatest quantity of gold is dug out from Siberia. In America, California is famous for the production of gold. Gold is found in many parts of Australia. At present, Johonnasburg<sup>8</sup> has been very famous in the world for its gold-mines. The most famous silver-mines in the world were in South America. During the last three hundred years silver worth sixty crores of pounds<sup>9</sup> was obtained from the mines of Potosi in Bolivia.<sup>10</sup> At present silver is exported from Mexico and the United States in large quantities.

of the Sahara,<sup>2</sup> but where the Nile flows we see green fields, fruit-gardens, orchards and trees. As far as the Nile flows, the ground is seen covered with vegetation. If the Nile were removed, all this green verdure would perish and Egypt would turn into a sandy desert.<sup>3</sup> For this very reason Egypt is called “the Gift<sup>4</sup> of the Nile” in English. Countries, where there are many rivers and streams are fertile<sup>5</sup> and prosperous.<sup>6</sup>

Our body is not like dry wood, it is soft; for it consists mostly of water, and there are several reasons for it. The food we eat goes into the stomach, and there it is changed into blood. That blood passes through small blood-vessels,<sup>7</sup> and circulates<sup>8</sup> through the whole body, and the body takes its nourishment from the blood. Now if there were no water in the body, the blood would become thick and could not flow through blood-vessels, because some blood-vessels are finer even than hair. The water we drink mixes with the blood, and circulates into every part of the body. If water were dirty<sup>9</sup> and impure<sup>10</sup> our health would certainly suffer. From this we know the value of water. Pure water is as necessary as pure air. We not only drink water but we also use it in bathing,<sup>11</sup> washing and cooking<sup>12</sup> purposes. How dirty our body and clothes would be, if there were no water. The cleanliness of our body and clothes depends upon water. Water is a great blessings.<sup>13</sup> great store of water is the sea, but its water is salt. The chief source<sup>1</sup> of fresh<sup>2</sup> water is rain. The water of the sea turns into vapour<sup>3</sup> and goes high up into the air. This vapour condenses, and falls down in the form of drops, which we call rain. This rain-water goes into rivers, streams<sup>4</sup> and lakes. Some water is sucked<sup>5</sup> into ground and goes into wells. On high mountains like the Himalayas, rain falls in the form of snow,<sup>6</sup> and that snow melts and flows down and rivers are formed of it.

RIVERS—The river is a source of great happiness to the people of those towns and villages which are situated on the banks of rivers. They use the water of that river in many ways. They take water for drinking from it, bring their cattle there to drink them, wash clothes on its banks, and if the river be large, it becomes a high<sup>7</sup> way of commerce. People also make bad use of rivers. In the morning they go to river banks with jugs in their hands. This habit is very filthy. Some people bathe their cattle there, by which water is polluted.<sup>8</sup> It should be done so at the place where people take water to drink.

PONDS—There are ponds near villages which are far from rivers. But the water of a pond does not flow, so special care should be taken of it. People bathe there, clean their teeth, wash their faces, spit there, wash clothes, bathe their cattle, and from that very place they take water for drinking and cooking. What a filthy habit this is! It is better to sink wells near ponds and to use water for drinking.

WELLS—The water of some wells is salt, they are useless. But care should be taken of those wells, the water of which is fresh and where people come to fetch water. If trees hang over such wells, and if their leaves fall into them, and decay, water may be spoiled. There-

The Sun.

We see the sun<sup>1</sup> every day. It appears reddish<sup>2</sup> when it rises in the morning and sets in the evening. If we look at it at that time, we can do so. But at noon, when it comes overhead, its light is so strong that we cannot endure to look at it. The darkness, which intervenes be-

It falls down again in the form of rain. Trees and herbs<sup>6</sup> all grow on account of its heat,<sup>7</sup> or it is its heat that makes trees and herbs all grow. Where there is less heat of the sun, there is more cold,<sup>8</sup> so trees and herbs do not grow well. The reason<sup>9</sup> why the disk of the sun appears small is that it is millions of miles distant.<sup>10</sup> Truly speaking,<sup>11</sup> it is exceedingly<sup>12</sup> large.

The lion was waked<sup>1</sup> and seized<sup>2</sup> a mouse with his paw. He was just about<sup>3</sup> to kill it when the mouse entreated<sup>4</sup> him and said 'My liege, Forgive this fault of mine.' The lion was merciful<sup>5</sup> and let it go. This mouse when going<sup>6</sup> said " Sir, When you will fall into trouble, I will do<sup>7</sup> all I can for you, and relieve you from it, because you gifted my life to-day." The lion smiled and said<sup>8</sup> to himself "How much this little rat brags! It has no knowledge<sup>9</sup> of my strength, I am the king of the whole forest to whom this wretch of a rat says that it will relieve<sup>10</sup> me from trouble. How silly it is!"

some one had spread a net<sup>2</sup>, under the same tree. The very lion was caught<sup>3</sup> in it and struggled<sup>4</sup> hard but could not get free, and when he was much confused, he began to roar. On hearing this the rat immediately<sup>5</sup> came out of its hole, and when he looked, it saw the lion in great trouble.

The mouse thought that it was the time of repaying his kindness. It then addressed the lion. "Great king, Do not fear, your servant is present<sup>6</sup> here; he will render every service he can. Afterwards it gnawed<sup>7</sup> that net with its teeth, and set the lion free. The lion also understood "I laughed at him with hatred the other day, but now I came to know that even a straw is sometimes useful." From this story the reader must remember that when the occasion comes all are useful.<sup>8</sup> Again if any one has done us a good

LESSON XIX.

The Rain. Part I.

If we place a bowl of water on fire, steam<sup>1</sup> like vapour is seen issuing from it, and the water becomes less and less.<sup>2</sup> In the same<sup>3</sup> way, if we place a bowl of water in the heat of the sun, the water becomes less after a long time. Just as all the water of the bowl placed on fire is turned into vapour by the heat of fire, and disappears, so the water of the bowl placed in the sun-shine is turned into vapour by the heat of the sun. But the steam<sup>4</sup> is very rare, and so it cannot be seen with the eye. In the same way<sup>5</sup> the water of a bog, pond or sea becomes vapour by the heat of the sun, and rises up into the sky. The clouds, which we see, are formed of such risen up vapour. When these clouds, fall down in the form of drops, they are called rain.

LESSON XX.

All the people are benefited by the rain. If there were no rain, jowar, millet wheat or anything would not be produced. Grass also would not grow. Wells,<sup>2</sup> tanks and rivers, would be dried up, therefore there would be no water to irrigate the fields situated<sup>3</sup> on their banks, and so corn<sup>4</sup> would not grow at all. Drought would ensue; the soil would become dry<sup>5</sup> and hard; trees and vegetables would be parched up and parish. When it has so happened, men, cattle, beasts and birds would all begin to die of hunger and thirst. When there is such a state of things, a famine<sup>6</sup> is said to have taken place, therefore every thing would go wrong without rain. When it rains, we should understand that God is kind to us: and therefore we deserve to be very<sup>7</sup> thankful to Him.

The young fly.

A little young fly was perching with its mother on a wall. The mother had to go away from that place, so when going, she said to her young one " I shall come immediately;<sup>1</sup> do sit only here, and do not go out till I come back."<sup>2</sup> The young one asked<sup>3</sup> " Why not, mother ? " The fly said " Do you see yonder boiling pond ? Pointing to the water which was boiling on a fire-place, she said " If we went to it, it would be very harmful."

The young one,—" Well, what harm is there, if I go near it ? "

The mother,—" Child, you will fall in. All who fall into it, die, do not go there."

The young one,—" Why should I fall in, mother ? "

The mother,—" That I don't know, but I have seen many such cases, therefore I tell you, so you should obey me. A young fly that went there, fell into it and died. Not one has escaped." The mother thought her child would attend<sup>4</sup> to her advice,<sup>5</sup> and so, she flew off.

Afterwards the young one began to laugh at its mother's advice, and said to itself "This old woman is extremely anxious; as<sup>6</sup> she advances in years, so her sense decreases. What harm will it do her, if I fly to the pond and play there a little? Have I no wings? And do I not know how<sup>7</sup> to fly? Old persons are much accustomed<sup>8</sup> to talk<sup>9</sup> about wise things, but how can I like to do what they say? As for myself, I will go there, and see what happens." So saying, she flew towards the pond of boiling water. As soon as it reached there, the hot steam made her head dizzy, and it fell into the pot. When dying, it said "children, who do not obey their parents, suffer thus. Alas! How foolish I was not to heed my mother's advice. If I had heeded it such would not have been my condition." ## LESSON XXII.

The Wounded Reaper.

A man once reaping in a field was hurt by a sickle, with which he cut his arm. This wound was so deep that his main artery was cut.<sup>1</sup> The main artery is generally very deep in the body, and when it is cut, the blood flows down copiously from it, because it is like a pipe. Just as water from a pipe placed in a reservior flows down rapidly, when the former is broken, so the blood from the main artery also flows down. Let the reservior represent the heart, and the pipe<sup>2</sup> the main artery, that is, the blood from the heart flows throught the main artery, so, when it is cut, it bleeds copiously. The only way to stop the bleeding is to make a pressure<sup>3</sup> between the heart and

1. Was divided. 2. And વડી let, વડી pipe વડી represent અંબાર ૩. 3. To press the part.

the part cut, so that the blood running towards it may be stopped.

But that man had his main artery cut from which the blood flowed out copiously. On seeing this, the people about him were alarmed,<sup>4</sup> some began to run away, while some stood stock still. In the mean time, an active and stout girl come up running, and cutting a piece from the tie string of her petticoat, bound it tight round the wound, by which the blood ceased to flow. Had that girl not done so, the poor man would have died.<sup>5</sup> At such a time all persons should have presence of mind, and promptly take a proper remedy. Thus many lives<sup>6</sup> are saved by persons having presence<sup>7</sup> of mind.<sup>8</sup>

LESSON XXIII.

What should be done in case of fire.

Some persons have such a habit<sup>1</sup> that as soon as they find their clothes on fire, they began to run about, and coming out of their houses, they cry, but this remedy is of no use.<sup>2</sup> On the contrary, by running about in this way, more clothes would take<sup>3</sup> fire, and cause a flame, and consequently, the arms, the face and the whole body may be burnt.<sup>4</sup> The only best way is to rub out with the hands the end or border of the cloth, which may have caught fire. If the cloth has taken more fire, it should be taken out, it possible, such as a dhotar, a scarf or a turban, but if a coat itself has taken fire, one should lie down<sup>5</sup> at his full length on the ground, and roll about. If there is some coarse<sup>6</sup> cloth, a blanket, a carpet or anything else at hand, he should wrap<sup>7</sup> it round his body. If any of them is not at hand, the end on fire should be put out by rubbing it against the ground. If you do so, all the fire will be extinguished and there will be no more damage than the clothes burnt, and you will be personally safe.

If there is some one on the spot, the only thing he should do, is to throw a coarse cloth like a carpet or a blanket on that man's body, and in his absence, dust should be thrown with both hands on the burning clothes, when the burning will be put out.

Sometimes, while cooking, if a pan with oil is on a hearth, a drop of water falling into it causes a flame, by which a story or a roof if low, takes fire, and a fire takes place. At such a time one should have presence of mind. A flame, is no sooner produced than the pan should be taken down if possible,<sup>8</sup> but if this cannot be done, a basketful of dust or earth should be thrown into it, when the burning will be instantly<sup>9</sup> extinguished, and no more damage<sup>10</sup> will be done.

Two Cats and a Monkey.

Two cats brought a loaf of bread from a certain place, but while distributing it, they fell<sup>1</sup> out. Then they went to a monkey for<sup>2</sup> the settlement of the quarrel, who welcomed them. The cats said "For this loaf of bread a quarrel has arisen<sup>3</sup> between us; therefore be good enough to mediate, and decide it." The monkey replied "My dear ladies, What an honour you have conferred<sup>4</sup> upon me by paying me this visit. I shall do you justice, you need not be anxious about it." He then divided the loaf into two parts, and placed each of them into the scale of a balance. When one of the scales went down, he took a piece from it, and took a mouthful. Then he put the remainder again into that scale, when the other scale went down. Then he took a piece from it and ate it. Then the cat saw through the trick, and said to the monkey "Dear Sir, kindly give us back what is left, we shall agree among ourselves." The monkey replied "Ladies,

The cats being alarmed besought the monkey, "Sir, Decide this case of ours somehow or other, and give us back this little piece of the loaf that is left." He replied "Oh, No, I could not think of doing such a thing. Should I not get something for the trouble I have taken all this time? Therefore this that is left is the reward for my trouble, you have no right to any of it. Saying so, he swallowed the two remaining pieces. After eating, he put on a solemn face, and said "Ladies, Your disput is over. Now you have no objection left. You know that I have removed the root of your dispute in your presence. Now you may freely go home. Again, if there is any such business at any other time, you may entrust it to me without the least doubt.<sup>7</sup> There is a proverb.<sup>8</sup> 'It was the law that did the oyster<sup>9</sup> suck and gave to each a shell.'<sup>10</sup>

Man stands erect with his legs. His head<sup>2</sup> remains<sup>3</sup> upright on the neck between the two shoulders. He has two arms and two legs. He holds everything with the hand. The sole of his foot touches the ground. The head turns right and left. The crown<sup>4</sup> of the head, and the upper part of the back of the neck are all called the skull. The hair<sup>5</sup> grows on it. The brain is inside the skull. The skull, as it were, is its case. The brain inside receives no shock even if this bony case receive a slight blow. On the face<sup>6</sup> are the eyes, the nose the mouth, the chin and the cheek on each side. Above the eyes are the eye lids, and the eyelids have eye-lashes which serve to close the eyes, and to greatly prevent dust, dirt air, and excessive light from entering the eyes. From the eyes come out a little water by which the eyes are kept moist.

Above the eyes are the eye-brows, and above them is the forehead. Man sees with his eyes anything that is at hand. What is at a very great distance, is also seen.

The nose is between the eyes and the two cheeks. The two holes of it are called nostrils. Smell is known by the nose. The hair, which grows below the nose of a man is called the mustaches. Some wear whiskers. Under the mouth is the chin.

single, while the back ones are double, which are called mollars.<sup>3</sup> The front teeth are used in biting and seizing. The four canine teeth are used in tearing. We can chew with the mollars only. Just as corn is ground in a mill<sup>4</sup> and becomes flour, so what is eaten is chewed under the mollars and becomes fine. What is chewed is repeatedly brought by the tongue between the teeth and becomes finer and smoother by being mixed with the saliva, which is produced in the whole mouth. Afterwards, it at once passes through the throat into the stomach. As long as what is eaten is in the mouth the tongue and the palate enjoy its taste. The mouth serves the purpose of speaking also. On the right side below the chest is the lung from which air<sup>5</sup> is exhaled. All these, the mouth, the lips, the tongue, the teeth and the palate produce human speech.<sup>6</sup>

The skin<sup>8</sup> is used in knowing the property<sup>9</sup> which is perceived by touching<sup>10</sup> other object. As described above, those by which the form, taste, smell, properties etc. of things are known, are called the organs of sense. Man has five senses, their names are the eye, the ear, the nose, the tongue and the skin.

LESSON XXVII.

A Brave young boy.

There is a country in the continent<sup>1</sup> of Europe, which is called Holland. The word "Holland" means hollow or low ground. The reason why this country is known<sup>2</sup> under such a name is that in some parts of it, land is on a lower level<sup>3</sup> than that of the sea, and the people are obliged to build a broad wall of sand, earth and stone to prevent the water of the sea from coming. These walls are called dykes or embankments. If there is a small hole in these embankments, it becomes a large one in a short time, and the water of the sea rushes in, and cattle and people are carried away. "Oh ! What is this ? There is a hole in the dyke, and the water is flowing in a stream." Thus a boy returning home from school in the evening saw the water trickling from the dyke, and said. Hans Vedder was a young boy, but being diligent, he kept the first number in the class, and was also first in school<sup>4</sup> games. Also, if he saw any uncommon thing while passing by the road, he used to ask his teacher or his father about it. His father had told him that if water were seen to be triking from the dyke. it should be at once stopped; otherwise there would be a large hole in a short time, and the land would be covered up by the water of the sea, and the whole village would be washed away. At first Hans thought "I shall run away and speak to my father." But in the mean time water began to flow in a large stream. There Hans resolved to do his best to prevent the water from coming in. He kept sitting there with his palm pressed on the whole. He thought that some one passing by the way would run to his help. One hour passed, two hours passed, the evening fell, it became dark but nobody passed by that ways. Hans kept sitting for the whole night. At dawn of day a farmer who was going by that way, asked Hans "I say, What are you doing there?" Hans replied "There is a hole in the dyke, I have closed it with my palm." The farmer<sup>5</sup> came running saying "Oh! What are you doing?" He raised shouts when others came up running, and closed that hole.<sup>6</sup> Afterwards Hans was carried to his house, because he had become stiff on account of cold. Bravo to such a brave boy!

many countries. There are some copper mines in England. Most of this copper is mixed with sulphur. It is heated and sulphur is separated. A few years ago pure copper was found from Australia. It is thought that copper was the first metal that was used by man, because in very ancient times vessels and arms were made of bell-metal.<sup>2</sup> Bell-metal is made by mixing tin<sup>3</sup> with copper. Copper is much cheaper than gold<sup>4</sup> and silver.<sup>5</sup> For it is found in abundance. One tola (weight of one rupee) of gold would purchase nearly fifteen tolas, and about a thousand tolas of copper. Copper is also coined into pice<sup>6</sup> and pies. Copper-sheets are fixed on to ships on both sides in order that no insect can stick to them, and that their part lying in water may be smooth. Its sheets are useful for engravings of several kinds.

Iron is the most useful metal of all, and by the grace of God, it is found in a great abundance. It is found in most countries. Some stones appear red, which is due to iron<sup>7</sup>. It is mixed with other metals and so in Europe what is stated below is done to separate it. Iron is cut into small pieces, which are put into a furnace, and lime stones, and coal are placed with them. The furnace is greatly heated. By this iron is melted, and goes down into a vessel below through a hole at the bottom of the furnace, and dross, stone etc. are left. When this liquid cools down, it is called cast-iron. It is hard but brittle. Boilers and other articles are made of iron. In order to make it fit to be forged, it is again melted, and much stirred like porridge.<sup>8</sup> At last, it is taken out, cooled down, and much beaten with large hammers; when it becomes wrought-iron. Afterwards it is made into articles, such as nails,<sup>9</sup> locks rings &c.<sup>10</sup>

LESSON XXIX.

The Fish.

The fish<sup>1</sup> has no feet. It has a knotted spine<sup>2</sup> on its back. It breathes<sup>3</sup> the air that is in the water. It has no nostrils to breathe just as we have, but it breathes by means of something like a fringe of cloth under its head. The fish has a bladder which it feels with the air and so when it swells it, it (the fish) swims upon the water. And when it wants to go down into the water, it presses it, and goes down to the bottom. The fish lays numerous eggs. There is a kind of fish which lays four millions of eggs every time. If so many young ones were spared, their number would be endless. But the fish of another kind eats up these eggs and the young ones that come out, so that their number is not multiplied. The fish sees and hears much, but it does not appear to possess any vocal faculty;<sup>4</sup> because there is a kind of fish which sometimes appears on the surface of the sea in such a large number that for a mile round they appear on the surface of the sea, but in spite of such a large number of them no sound is heard.

Hence it does not appear to have any voice. The smallest fish is as large as the tip of a finger, while the largest one is some four or five fathoms<sup>5</sup> long. The fish seems to have sense.<sup>6</sup> It is very anxious<sup>7</sup> to protect itself, and to find out a suitable place for laying its eggs in, but after laying eggs, it takes no care of them at all. There is a kind of fish which leaves the salt water of the sea, and lays its eggs in the sand of the sand-bank of a river. Again there is another kind of fish which goes hundreds of miles up<sup>8</sup> a river flowing into the sea, lays its eggs there, and comes back into the sea. Some fish go from one sea to another every year.

LESSON XXX.

We all know this Sanskrit maxim. This means that truth<sup>1</sup> will triumph at last. A truthful man perhaps comes into troubles, but in the end he triumphs. The following written story is a fact, not an invented<sup>2</sup> one. Once upon a time an old German clergyman<sup>3</sup> named John Kant was going home after preaching to the people of distant villages. He had to pass through a large forest. It was the time of sunset.<sup>4</sup> He was going along a narrow track on horse-back, when some robbers rushed out of a thicket and surrounded the old clergyman. The leader of the robbers said, "Reverend Sir, Excuse the undue liberties we take. But give us what you have." The told man dismounted from the horse and gave (them) his purse,<sup>5</sup> watch &c. The Robbers said "Have you got anything else?" The old clergyman replied "No, Friends,

This was all I had." The leader said "Now you can go." The poor old man had to go on foot. No sooner did he go a little further than something knocked<sup>6</sup> against his hand "Oh! This is the lump of gold which was sewn in the hem of my coat. It was good that so much was left with me, but soon his conscience<sup>7</sup> began to tell him "John Kant, you told<sup>8</sup> a lie, you cheated the robbers" He at once turned back. The robbers were still there. They were surprised<sup>9</sup> on seeing the old man returning. Holding forth that piece of gold before them, he said "Excuse me, I told a lie, I forgot to give you this gold." Those robbers were exceedingly pleased with the honesty of the clergyman, and gave back to him whatever they had taken from him. Kant gave them blessings<sup>10</sup> and took his way.

LESSON XXXI.

Affection to Parents.

A mountain from the top of which smoke, red-hot stones and hot-metled lava are sometimes thrown with great violence is called a volcano,<sup>1</sup> that is a burning mountain. Many years ago, an eruption of an usually violent kind took place in such a mountain in one of the countries of Europe, and red-hot lava flowed<sup>2</sup> down in streams on all sides of it, by which whole villages were destroyed. The sky was covered with the flying of embers and ashes. At that time among the people of surrounding villages, who fled for their lives with their dearest things,<sup>3</sup> were two young brothers, who fled with a different kind of treasure on their backs. The treasure was such as could not be got again by any other means. That treasure was their parents, whom they placed on their shoulders and escaped.

1. Volcanic (a) ગાગાગાગાગા વર્ત સંઘર્ષ. 2. Poured down. 3. The most valuable of their goods.

When<sup>4</sup> the people saw the conduct of these two men, they were greatly astonished. God so ordered it that though the surrounding objects were all burnt, yet the lava did not come on, and so the way remained entirely green.<sup>5</sup> The people thereof were ignorant, but their hearts were good, so they believed that the place was supernaturally<sup>6</sup> saved on account of the merits of those boys, and from that day the place has been called "The Field of the Pious."

LESSON XXXII.

A Stag looking into water.

A stag that was looking into water, was much pleased to see his shadow reflected<sup>1</sup> in it. Then gazing at himself from head to foot, it said. "Ah, what a fulness of horns on my head! My face, thereby looks very beautiful. On saying so, its sight<sup>2</sup> was directed to its legs. On finding them very slender, he says, "I have everything good, but these slender legs ashamed me. How elegant my body would have looked, if I had no horns at all instead of having them so formed!" While he was thus meditating,<sup>3</sup> hounds came running from behind. On seeing them, it ran for its life, and it began to run into a thicket in order that they<sup>4</sup> might not see it, whereupon its horns were<sup>5</sup> entangled in the branches of a tree. It pulled and tugged hard to take them out, but he could not, while the hounds came up, seized it, and were going to kill it. Then it began to repent within itself "The very legs, I despised, and of which I was saying "that I should be better without them, delivered me from distress; but the horns of which I was proud<sup>6</sup> involved" me in trouble. How happy I would have been, if I had not got these horns"<sup>8</sup> There is a proverb that a full-fed horse kills his own master." The lesson to be derived from this story is that we ought to think well before we despise every thing, because, on account of thoughtlessness we despise some profitable<sup>9</sup> things, and undervalue them, while we are pleased to see ornamental things which cannot but ruin<sup>10</sup> us in the end.
